ATTRACTIONS OF THE STAGE

A New Play in Which Popular Kate Castleton Begins the Week at English's.

She Will Be Succeeded by Kiralfy's Latest Spectacular Success-Vernona Jarbeau at the Grand and Frayne at the Park.

Miss Kate Castleton's new play "A Paper Doll," which she will present at English's tomorrow night and until Thursday, promises to be as productive of laughter as her earlier play, "Crazy Patch." The piece is a musical farcecomedy, written especially for Miss Castleton by Frank Tannehill, jr., who also is in the cast. The play gets its name from a picture in a locket, on which depends the identification of the heiress. The character of the lowly beiress is played by Miss Castleton, who is, of course, the central figure of the play. Found at the door of the work-house she' finally commences life as the servant girl in a boarding-house. Being good looking and exceedingly lively she becomes a great favorite with the boarders, and is given a locket by one of them, which he has received from an elderly and wealthy spinster in the piece. Two of these lockets have been made, and when the elderly spinster finds Dolly in possession of one she at once comes to the conclusion that she is the heiress of the estate, worth $75,000. Nobles, the boarder who gave Dolly the locket, naturally swears that he still has it, and the situation of things leads to endless and amusing complications. Mr. Harry Phillips has surrounded his star with a company in which are Peter F. Dailey, who has an eccen tric comedy part, Bertie Coote, Frank Tannehill, jr., Miss Ada Deaves, Pauline Duffield, Miss Maud Giroux, and others. Miss Castleton will intro-duce her original song, "For Goodness Sake Don't Say I Told You," "Spider and the Fly" and other new selections.

Mr. Imre Kiralfy's gorgeous production of the Ravel pantomime "Mazulm, the Night Owl," will be seen the first time in this city at English's. Thanksgiving (next Thursday) matinee and evening and the rest of the week. This is the most elaborate and costly production Mr. Kiralfy has yet given the public. Nearly one hundred people are employed in it, and it requires two special cars to transport the scenery employed. The result is that the presentation is a revelation in scenic and mechanical effects. All the scenery was painted by Robecchi and Amabee, the Parisian scento artists. Some of the sets, notably the change from the moonlit cometery to a gorgeous palace, and that from a sunset in Constantinople to a marine view on the Bosphorus, are said to be really wonderful in their elaborate magnificence. There will be three grand ballets—the "Ballet of Sports," introducing the popular sports of the day, the brilliant "Paradise Ballet," and a grand "Metallic Amazon March," the latter executed by handsome ladies clad in armor. A number of specialties are introduced, among which are the Dare brothers, the gymnasts; the Herbert brothers; also, Mr. John Le Clau, the equilibrist and juggler. The advance sale of seats will begin on Tuesday, and the prices will be 25, 50 and 75 cents and $1.

Clever Vernona Jarbeau, one of the most popular artistes who come to this city, will be the Thanksgiving attraction at the Grand the latter part of this week, opening her engagement with a special matinee on Thursday, and continuing until Saturday, with another matines on Saturday. She will play in the sprightly musical comedy "Starlight," which made such a favorable impression here last season. Miss Jarbeau is unique and inimitable in her particular line. Her acting is full of delicate abandon, and she is graceful and spirited in all of her work. She is particularly taking in her songs, French and English, while her topical song, "That's Enough, Don't You Think?" has made a hit everywhere. She dances a tarantella which is a dream of graceful abandon. Her piece affords her ample opportunity to display her talents, and has been largely rewritten, with new songs and music added. She has a company selected for musical comedy, including Alonzo Hatch, Harry C. Clarke, Harry Standish, Amy Brooks, Bessie Eleveland, Lottie Atler, and others. Seats will be on sale for her engagement on Tuesday morning, at regular prices.

Mr. Frank I. Frayne, the most popular of all the sensational actors, will play at the Park Theater all this week, presenting a varied repertoire, which promises to greatly please the pstrons of this house. His engagement will begin with "Mardo the Hunter," the scenes in which are transferred from California to the wilds of northern Siberia, and which will be given the first two days of the week. Among its striking scenes are the convict camp, a snow-storm, and the burning of the but, which, by the way, is one of the most realistic things recently seen on the stage. Mr. Frayne will also present the new "Si Slocum" and his new play "Kentucky Bill," which has never been given here, but which is perarded as the strongest piece he has. In all his plays Mr. Frayne introduces his lion Ingervoll, the largest oge in captivity; his acting dog Jack, his trained bears and other animals. "Mardo" will be given Monday and Tuesday, "Si Slocum" Wednesday and Thursday, and "Kentucky Bill" the rest of the week.

Big Eliza, who is the residuary legatee of Winnie Johnson, and who is a larger woman than the latter, will be the special attraction at the Eden Musee this week. In the graphic language of her manager, "She is bigger than a sprinkling cart." She actually weighs 780 bust. In addition to her the other new features will be Barnello, the human volcano, who drinks boiling oil and ears molton lead; the Fiji princess and her children; Dahoma, the Mexican giant, and others. The Musee is open from 12 bt. to 11 P. M. daily, and the admission is but Would II Ah! no. pounds, and measures 118 inches around the

In their efforts to do everything at the Park that will make it a perfect theater of its kind. Mesers. Dickson & Talbott have been making some more improvements lately. The last of these is an elaborate electric light plant, which will be put in operation this week, and will filluminate the house inside and out, on the stage and in the auditorium. This will materially lessen any danger that may have been feared from fire, and makes the house very brilliantly lighted.

Gossip of the Theaters. Reader, Brazil: It is pronounced as spelled, Herrmann, the magician, will be at the Grand the first part of the present week.

The matinee prices Thanksgiving day at all the city theaters will be the same as at night. "A Paper Doll" is said to give Miss Kate Cas-tleton better opportunities to display her clever-ness than any other play she has had.

Imre Kiralfy has secured the rights of a new spectacle, which will be produced simultaneously in New York, Paris, London and Vienna. The "legitimate" is very strong this season. Frank Frayue introduces a lion, two bears, a byens, a trained dog and two horses in his plays. Miss Minnie K. Gale, the stage beauty of the Booth-Barrett company, is rapidly coming to the front as a capable actress of leading letigitimate

'The chorus girl of the period wears her floral favore pinned on the left hip. A lobby wag says the reason is there is no other place where a painless pin can be put.

Lillian Russell declares that she will be twenty-six next Dec. 14. Zelie de Lussan will be twenty-six in the same month. Marion Manola says she is twenty-six, and so does Vernona Jarbeau. What a calamity had 1862 been emitted from history!

One of the most clever women on the stage is with Vernous Jarbeau's Starlight Company. An excellent actress, a charming lady, and a vocalist with few equals. These are elements that are very rare, but this talented artist possesses all of them. She is one of the leading members of the company, and a very valuable one. Her name is Bessie Cleveland.

"A Legal Wreck." after running seventeen weeks at the Madison-square Theater, was transferred, on Monday night last, to the People's Theater, where it met with the same success that it achieved during its long run at Mr. Palmer's house. Mr. Gillette's peculiar and unique comedy, which is original with "A Legal Wreck," places the piece in the front rank of this season's triutuphs.

Joseph Jefferson and Stuart Robson will be the only comedians in England or America next season who will play legitimate comedy. Mr. Jefferson will continue in "The Rivals," and postibly "The Heir at Law." Mr. Robson will pretibly "The Heir at Law." Mr. Robson will pretibly "The Heir at Law." Mr. Robson will pretible the new romantic play by Steele Mackaye, oh will give him an eccentric character of Shakeperson favor. In addition to this he will have the exclusive control of "The Henri-etta," surely the brightest and purest play since Goldsmith, with "She Stoops to Conquer," struck a mortal blow at the indecencies of Wycherly

There is serious talk of reviving "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in New York, with Alice Harrison as Topsy, Milt Barlow as Uncle Tom, and Ralph Delmore as Legree. That's a good starter for a cast, but if they ever expect to take the country by storm with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" they want a cast that will start with Lotta as Topsy. Joe Jefferson as Uncle Tom, Clara Morris as Eliza, and Booth as Legree. A cast like that would catch the gallery, sure.

The well known theatrical firm of Jacobs & Proctor has been dissolved, and hereafter their interests will be entirely separate. Mr. Proctor, who has a dozen or more theaters under his conwho has a dozen or more theaters under his control, will after the present season play first-class attractions only, and at regular prices. He also has an interest in several theatrical organizations, including Charles T. Ellis, the German comedian; Tom Craven's melodrama, "The Fugitive;" C. W. Couldock, in "Hazel Kirke," and Neil Burgess, in "A County Fair."

Eddy's Squib: Imre Kiralfy's glittering spec-tacle of "Mazulm" is making a fortune for that energetic manager. The pantomime is a sensu-ous array of handsome scenery, beautiful cos-tumes and pretty women. This season many new features and several specialty performers have been added to the performance, including Bibb and Bob, the musical clowns. Tommy Tet, the clown, who was so seriously injured last season at the New York Academy of Music, has entirely recovered and is again appearing in "Mazulm."

Gillette's big "She" has secured a financial triumph at the Fourteenth-street Theater that has not been equaled in that house since J. W. Rosenquest has taken the management, with the exception of the splendid record made by "The Old Homestead." The new scenery by Phil Goatcher, the various remarkable spectacular effects were all successfully produced, and the New York press are unanimous in their announcement of the immensity of this spectacular organization, which will continue at the Fourteenth-street Theater for two weeks, and then commence a tour of the chief cities, returning in April for a run at Niblo's Garden. turning in April for a run at Niblo's Garden, New York.

Let us rest ourselves a bit. Worry!-wave your hand to it-Kiss your finger-tips, and smile It farewell a little while.

Weary of the weary way.

We have come from yesterday, Let us fret us not, instead, Of the weary way shead. Let us pause and catch our breath On the hither side of death, While we see the tender shoots

Of the grasses-not the roots.-While we yet look down-not up-To seek out the buttercup

And the daisy, where they wave O'er the green home of the grave. Let us launch us smoothly on Listless billows of the lawn. And drift out across the main. Of our childish dreams again:

Voyage off, beneath the trees, O'er the field's enchanted seas, Where the lilies are our sails. And our seaguils, nightingales;

Where no wilder storm shall beat Than the wind that waves the wheat, And no tempest burst above The old laughs we used to love; Lose all troubles—gain release, Langour and exceeding peace, Cruising idly o'er the vast Calm mid-ocean of the past;

Let us rest ourselves a bit. Werry!—wave your hand to it— Kiss your fingertips, and smile It farewell a litte while.

-James Whitcomb Riley, in the Home Megazine A Jar of Rose Leaves. Myriad roses fade unheeded. Yet no note of grief is needed: When the ruder breezes tear them. Sung or songless, we can spare them. But the choicest petals are Shrined in some deep Orient jar,

Rich without and sweet within, Where we cast the rose leaves in Life has jars of costlier price Framed to hold our memories. There we treasure baby smiles, Boyish exploits, girlish wiles, All that made our childish days Sweeter than these trodden ways Where the fates our fortunes spin Memory, toss the rose leaves in

What the jar holds, that shall stay: Time steals all the rest away. Cast in love's first atolen word. Bliss when uttered, bliss when heard; Madien's looks of shy surprise; Giances from a hero's eyes; Palms we risked our souls to win. Memory, fling the rose leaves in!

Now more somber and more slow Let the incantation grow! Cast in shreds of rapture brief. Subtle inks 'twixt hope and grief; agrant fancy's dangerous toys, Covert dreams, narcotic joys Flavored with the taste of sin; Memory, pour the rose leaves in Quit that borderland of pain! Cast in thoughts of nobler vein; Magic gifts of human breath, lysteries of birth and death. What if all this web of change But prepare for scenes more strange, If to die be to begin! Memory, heap the rose leaves in.

-Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

am so tired to-day; long to lay My head, for rest, upon the pillow green Of some still church-yard grave, and shut me in From all the cares, the worries and the strife

Of all this anxious, restless mother life.

And sleep, please God, for aye. Ah! Little children, with your dancing feet And glances sweet! I have so weary of my burden grown, I fain would loose your fingers from my own, And leave to other hands the dear delight

I could not sleep within my grassy bed
For hearing pattering footsteps overhead.
This mother heart, though turned to dust, would throb

Responsive to the baby's lonely sob, However faint and low. And so I could not rest me after all;

The grasses tall
And snowy daisies could not bring me peace;
The aching mother love would never cease.
Oh! Christ, who gave this love with motherhood. Oh mothers tired bestow this greater good.
Patience—whate'er befall! -Eva P. Kitchell, in the Home-maker.

The Distant Harbor. "The far-off close of life."-Hawthorne. Unto the eyes of youth the final day Of life upon this earthly planet seems Of life upon this earthly planet seems
So far ahead, so very far away.

"Tis seldom thought of amid pleasant dreams.
And when old age approaches, year by year,
When youth's sweet, happy, golden hours have fled,
We do not feel that it must needs be near;
The close of life still seemeth far ahead.

Tis natural, with the voyage just begun,
That far away the port should seem to be;
But strange it is, the harbor almost won,
That naught beside the same wide stretch of sea
Should greet the mariner's sight; till all is o'er
He does not know that he is near the shore.

-Henry Talcott Mills, in Boston Transcript.

Written for the Sunday Journal.

As one who lingers for a parting word,
Fair Dian on the western hills doth stay,
And throws o'er vale and stream a parting ray,
Then slowly sinks amid the clouds of ourd, Serene and sweet; by roaming breezes stirred,
The forest bows; and, down its depths away.
Like a lone voice in a cathedral gray.
I hear the wail of night's forsaken bird.
The shadows deepen and the hour is late;
The chanticleer his drowsy watch has cried;

The cricket trilled his last; yet still I wait, Unconscious of the hours as they glide. And o'er the dying embers meditate, Like Isaac 'mid the fields at eventide.

To Robert Burns Wilson. What intuition named thee? Through what thrill What intuition named thee? Through what thrill
Of the awed soul came the command divine
Into the mother-heart, fortelling thine
Should palpitate with his whose raptures will Sing on while daisies bloom, and lavrocks trill
Their undulating ways up through the fine
Fair mists of heavenly reaches? Thy pure line
Fails as the dew of anthems, quiring still
The sweeter since the Scottish singer raised
His voice therein, and, quit of every stress

His voice therein, and, quit of every stress
Of earthly ache and longing and despair.
Know certainly each simple thing he praised
Was no less worthy, for its lowliness,
Than any joy of all the glory there. -James Whitcomb Biley, in The Critic.

IN BOSTON THEATERS.

An Indianapolis Lady Gossips of Hading, Coquelin and Other Dramatic Lights.

Special Correspondence of the Indianapolis Journal. BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 23.-Suppose we start out with the intention of discussing Madame Jane Hading and M. Coquelin from a common-sense, every-day stand-point, leaving the feast of slaughter to the critical virtuosos. These last named are having a time of thorough enjoyment during the Coquelin-Hading engagement. The first question is: Do the majority of people in the large audiences assembled to witness the performance of this French and French-speaking company, honestly enjoy or appreciate it? No. I answer, decidedly, they do not. If one reads French fluently, speaking after the fashion of Americans taught in America, it is still impossible to follow these natives. As for those who know nothing of the language, in all honesty they are bored. I entered the Hollis-street Theater filled with a proud, strutting consciousness of my own French acquirements and capacity for enjoying the play. I disdained the thought of a libretto; before the first scene was ended I humbly called the libretto boy, acknowledging inwardly that the uttered sounds of the actors were to me like flowing bubbles internally, which burst between the laryox and palate. Behind me sat two women trying their best to do the right thing. Each held a libretto which she studied all afternoon, occasionally taking a peep over the top of her guide book for a look at the stage. Throughout the performance I would hear enthusiastic bursts from them, such as, "Oh, isn't she lovely?" "What a great actor he is," "Now, wasn't that clever?" Turning to gaze upon such enthusiasm beheld them both immersed as I have previously stated. The problem is, did they gather leveliness, greatness and cleverness from the book of the play? Beside me sat an old gentleman of evident intelligence, who grew restless and looked decidedly bewildered as the play progressed. Finally, towards the end of the first act, he turned to me with, "Madame, could I trouble you tell me which is Coquelin, for I cannot make out?" I reassured him by stating that neither Coquelin nor Hading would appear until the second act. The bewildered anuquity followed the audience in vociferous applause at the right moment, and I have no doubt he was as appreciative as at least half the people in the house. It certainly does not follow that M. Coquelin and Jane Hading are not artists, because foreigners to their language are prevented from keen appreciation by that obstacle of unfamiliar speech. M. Coquelin is remarkable for his ability to make much of very little, as is demonstrated by his wonderful acting of the numerous magnificent parts cast to him in this week's repertoire. We are all familiar enough with Frou-fron, La Dame aux Camellias, and L'Aventuriere (Home) to wonder previously what inspiration the great Coquelin can find in the parts of the brother Armival, in L'Aventuriere, and the father in Frou-Frou and Camille. Art with him seems to be the handling of a small creation with such consummate delicacy, strength and skili (a la the Melssonier school of painting) that it stands out in bold relief, recreated. What quaint and sudden quirks he displays in his countenance without contortions. This facial movement is quiet but penetrating, after the manner of his whole performance. His influence unassumingly takes possession of one until be becomes the supreme object of interest, even when speechless! Madam Hading lacks one element of beauty-magnetism. No one can deny her regularity of feature, but where is that subtle fascination which calls for morel Likewise with her acting, she has mastered all the mechanisms of her art to perfection. She is graceful and occasionally powerful, but that nameless something which demands responsive emotion, is lacking. Hading's mannerisms in the use of her head are attractive-it does not appear to grow out from between her shoulders but to nestie between them as it were, in a caressing fashion rather unusual. Her voice is totally unmusical. This fact detracts from her power the instant she speaks. The supporting company is unusually good, but what a contrast to an Irving performance is the scenic effect. There is really too little to speak of. I fear I am making a lapsus linguæ, for I find myself deep in individual impressions when I promised only the effect on the mass. I will desist, but must tell you what an interesting figure Mrs. James Brown Potter and "Curley" Bellew cut in a proscenium box at the special Coquelio matinee. Mrs. Potter is playing here under very favorable criticisms. Upon this occasion she was as beautiful as ever, in a complete black toilet. You may be sure she and her leading man were the cynosure of all eyes. Last night she essayed the role of Juliet for the first time. Although personally a dream of loveliness, the crimes do not admit her possibilities for the part. However, I pin my faith to Mrs. Potter as she will be some day, for surely never did a woman progress more steadily than never did a woman progress more steadily than she has since her debut as a professional actress.

"Have you heard Nadjy?" has been the current interrogation of the last few weeks, ever since that musical burlesque has been in our midst. "When one has seen Nadjy, what benefit has one derived?" None whatever, unless it is beneficial to "laugh and grow fat." There is nothing in this so-called opera so conspicuous as the absence of music; usually in such a performance there are several little gems of melody, but this composer forgot his melody and failed in harmony. The greatest hit in the opera is a duet "Listen to My Tale of Woe," interpolated by Marie Jansen and Francis Wilson. Only a siang phrase will express Wilson as Farragus. "Professor of Etiquette and Dancing"-he is simply immense. In response to vociferous applause after an ensemble act the performers crossed the stage in appropriate groups. The grand finale of the pro-cassion was Wilson, arrayed in what looked to be red sack-cloth. Attached to the handle of a o-cart, he walked stiff-legged, the whole heing an imitation of a tin horse and little red wagon, done in an automatic, solemnly irresistible manner. How can the Casino supply the loss of such a comedian when he takes to the road with his own company, as he expects to shortly? Pauline Hall was as beautiful as a hasbeesh dream, but she has a most ungrateful part, containing music far beyond her powers. Marie Jansen did a good day's work when she stepped into the shors emptied by Sadie Martinot's capricious defection, for the part suits her ex-actly. The black ballet costume, made notorious by much comment, which Jansen wears in the second act, is certainly unique of its kind, suggestive of his satanic Majesty disguised in fem-inine flesh, black tights and tulle. However, the piquant Marie is bewitchingly pretty in the title role. She is to be commended for the height attained in her profession in comparatively few years. Being a Boston girl she has received an ovation nightly during the engagement in the form of flowers and tumultuous applause.

The juvenile dramatic phenomena, nine-year-old Elsie Leslie, continues ato fascinate large audiences by her life-like performance of Little Lord Fauntleroy, in Mrs. Burnett's play of that name. Apropos, Mrs. Burnett has just honored the Hub with a visit. She is warrantably in-terested in the success of her own production in the hands of the precocious child, who is the Little Lord every night with such ease and grace: who talks about Gillett the actor as "My

His name is Davis. He is a man any-one would be pleased to know; a college gradnate of varied attainments. He is tall and finelooking, imbued with a spirit of love, benevolence and martyrdom. I presume you have heard that the history used for teaching in our public schools has been removed through the instrumentality of the Irish Catholic city administration and a text-book substituted which contains no mention of history detrimental to the Catholic Church and indulgences. This is rankling in a screepot with native Bostonians. It is interesting to watch the struggle against the Irish Catholic power which is gradually as-
